From care for the environment to care for the young and elderly, from mental health care to humanitarian care, from care understood as an obligation, as a gift, or as an affect, from ones, to the work of care giving in institutional settings, to the responsibility to care for those one does not know, the notion of 'care' encompasses a proliferating field of diverse relations. The question of care presents a central ethical and political challenge that is bound up with the increasing regulation and management of care tions as well as its privatization, quan-the global market. As a result, certain kinds of care – for certain people, an-are dismissed or ignored in the name of ostensibly more urgent, more praccerns. The symposium seeks to better understand prevailing regimes of care and explore under-represented or unacknowledged practices of care in the tical, and often more profitable con-imals, things, or the environment – relations by governmental institutification, and commodification on the intimacy of care among loved
